Increasing the level of Semarang City to become a megaregion also supports the Golden Indonesia Vision 2045.

Semarang City is now a metropolitan city which is a meeting point or hub for various regions in Central Java Province. The Mayor of Semarang, Hevearita Gunaryanti Rahayu, hopes that when Indonesia turns 100 years old in 2045, Semarang City will be at megaregion level.

"This megaregion means that there is advanced and sustainable connectivity in infrastructure, environment, economy, urban planning with other regions in Central Java," said Hevearita or who is usually called Mbak Ita.

Increasing the level of Semarang City to become a megaregion also supports the Golden Indonesia Vision 2045, namely realizing Indonesia as a Sovereign, Advanced and Sustainable Archipelago.

Because, when Indonesia reaches the age of one hundred years or a century, Indonesia will have become a developed and influential country on the world stage. And the two pillars of development in achieving Indonesia's Vision 2045 are sustainable economic development and equitable development. In translating these pillars, the participation of regional governments as an extension of the central government is needed. If the central government designs policies and regulations on a macro basis, regional governments act as executors and adapt them to the characteristics of each region.

Ms. Ita gave an example, the central government created a roadmap for Golden Indonesia 2045, one of which is through handling stunting. "We are in the region as implementers prepare innovations and collaborate to reduce the prevalence of stunting," he said.

The method is through Rumah Pelita as a home for handling stunting and the San Piisan program, an abbreviation for Love Accompanying Mothers and Children of Semarang City.

In exploring the potential and developing the city of Semarang, Mbak Ita implemented three strategies, namely moving together or collaborating, utilizing information technology, and competition. In building collaboration, the Semarang City Government collaborates with entrepreneurs, journalists, academics and the community to create innovative programs. The concrete form is that 270 Thematic Villages were born which are in line with the potential of each region.

In implementing information technology strategies, the Semarang City Government opens communication with the public via short messages or SMS and social media.
